

A for Alligator

Alligators live in America.
They are giant, intelligent reptiles directly descended from ancient crocodilians
that were alive
before the dinosaurs.

The temperature of the baby's nest determines if the baby alligator will be a boy or a girl.

Alligators can live for a century.
They can wait a year
between meals.

Alligators eat almost everything.
Primarily they eat fish,
small mammals and snakes.

Alligators spend most of their time in the water.
They swim by moving their tails
back and forth like fish.

Alligators are cold-blooded.
We often see them sunning on logs
or on banks near water.

Alligators are great swimmers.
And they can run very fast
over short distances.

See you later, alligator.
After a while, crocodile.
See you soon, raccoon.
Take care, brown bear.

Bye-bye, butterfly.
And the end
My friend!
