Psychologists believe that what you eat is a good reflection of what type of person you are.

What is your favourite vegetable?

ASPARAGUS

Your serious exterior belies your fun inner child. You love to travel and are well read, but often run away from experiences with very different impressions than your friends do.

BEANS

Whether parent, teacher or friend, you do it all with class. Although your empathetic nature causes you to conform to others' style. You are spiritual, spontaneous, and generous to a fault.

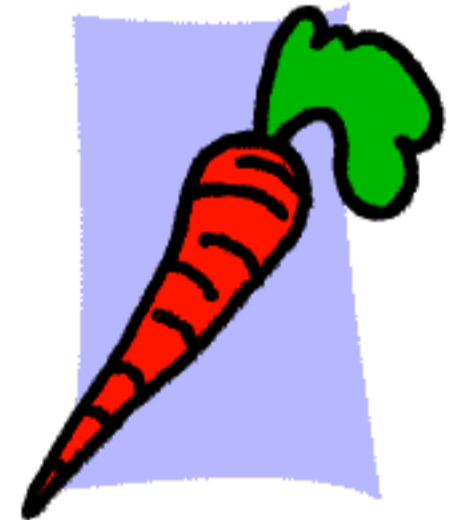

BROCCOLI

Cautious by nature, you seek status, power and financial gain. You should be encouraged to take time off from work and enjoy yourself. You are well groomed, if a bit on the conservative side.

CARROT

Because you prefer to work independently, you can appear aloof to others. You make good parents, showing great interest in your children's activities. You are detail-oriented, yet lead a simple life.

CORN

You're not afraid of hard work and rarely complain, though you are a bit of a martyr. Loyal and devoted with strong ethics, you go beyond the call of duty for your friends and your job.

CUCUMBER

Charming and endlessly social, you have an intuitive understanding of human nature; at times you can be childlike and even a bit gullible. No matter what you undertake, you give it your best shot.

GARLIC

You are powerful and controlling, with boundless energy. You succeed at whatever you choose to do and are the life of the party. Many of you still have some childhood issues to overcome.

MUSHROOM

Intellectual, yet moody, you live a life full of contradictions. Beneath your brooding surface lies a heart filled with humor and compassion. You're not as confident as you appear and often mistrust others.

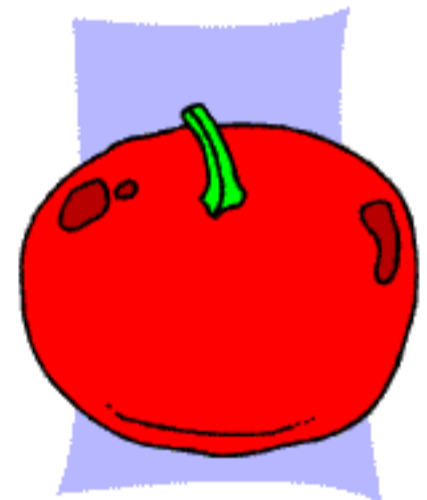

POTATO

Dependable and forthright. With you, what you see is what you get. Steady and relaxed, you enjoy sports and working out. Despite your many talents, you are humble in every way.

TOMATO

You embody a certain innocence and freeness. You are emotional, yet firm in your convictions and extremely loyal. As social as you seem, there is a side of you that deflects the spotlight.
